

Bonus Table:
Elements Involved in Developing a Research Design

- Choosing an independent variable.
 - Deciding on the number of levels of the independent variable.
 - Selecting the outcome measures.
 - Deciding on whether to pretest participants and the pretests to use.
 - Identification of research participants.
 - Deciding on the number of research participants.
 - Deciding on the manner of assigning the research participants to groups.
 - Deciding on the method of controlling for confounding variables.
 - Scheduling of research participants.
 - Deciding on the method of data analysis.
-