

HOPE, COMPASSION, SOLIDARITY: SOCIAL VIRTUES FOR MORAL REPAIR

Dr. Aaron Cobb
Professor of Philosophy
Auburn–Montgomery

Friday, March 24
3:00 pm
Student Center
203

Some experiences of suffering are morally injurious: they can ruin a person's sense of identity, meaning, and character.

The experience of moral injury may be self-inflicted; a person can injure himself either through deliberate participation in grave wrongdoing or by being caught up in social structures that implicate him in gross injustice.

In this talk, Cobb considers the kinds of dispositions that fit a community to respond well to moral injuries such as hope, compassion, and solidarity.