Department of Music: Tenure-Track Choral Music Position
The University of South Alabama Department of Music invites applications for a full-time (9-month), tenure-track Assistant Professor of Music position, specializing in Choral Music Education, starting on August 15, 2020. Minimum qualifications: Doctorate of Music, but candidates who are currently ABD in their degree program will be considered. Candidates should have a minimum of 3-5 years of successful public school teaching experience as a choral music educator and hold appropriate teaching certification. Effective knowledge of choral methods and techniques, vocal/choral pedagogy, classroom strategies, and understanding of 21st-century classroom technologies are also required. Candidates with additional experience in teaching elementary music methods, including Orff and Kodaly, will be strongly considered. Candidates should have a successful record of recruiting at the secondary and collegiate levels.

The successful candidate will teach courses in choral music education for undergraduate and graduate students. Additional courses in related areas may be assigned dependent on the successful candidate’s expertise.

Additional responsibilities will include academic advising and mentoring choral music education students, supervision of student teachers, and developing and maintaining productive relationships with area choral music educators. Coordination with the music education faculty and the College of Education in maintaining ongoing review of curriculum and certification standards, and active recruitment of students for the undergraduate and graduate programs in music education is expected. Contribution to the scholarly advancement of the field through research and/or creative activities is encouraged. Service on departmental, college, and university committees and active participation in respected state, regional, and national organizations is also expected.

Located in a metropolitan area of nearly 600,000 residents on the scenic Gulf of Mexico, the University of South Alabama is a comprehensive, global university that offers diverse and nationally recognized programs in a variety of fields.
